HER FOOLISH BOY.

That Was What She Called Him and She Was Not Half Wrong.

"Your Horace boy is so poor, sweetheart, that I fear it will be some time before he can make you his wife."

"Poor? Oh, Horace! You little know the depth of my affection! Nor do you realize the sacrifices I am willing to make for my boy!"
"My angel!"

"And it hurts me to have my boy call himself poor when he has me!'

"Forgive me, my love. I am rich, rich, rich, now that you are mine. But we will be poor in this world's goods until I have made a fortune for us. We will not be able to even keep a servant at first."

'And I shall not care. It shall be a joy for me to prepare my boy's meals with my own hands. Such dear little breakfasts and luncheons and dinners as we'll bave!"

"My darling!"

"Yes, dear! I suppose that my foolish boy has been fearing that he has engaged himself to a useless girl, who doesn't know how to cook, but he hasn't. want me to tell you what I can cook?"
"Yes, dearest."

"Well, I can brown sweetbreads beau tifully and I know how to get up the loveliest quail on toast, and I can make perfectly delicious frappe and I know how to make the loveliest pudding out of choice nuts and fruits to be served with a champagne sauce. Yes, indeed And I can make the most delicious pate de foie gras, and papa says my Welsh rabbits are lovely. Then, I know how to make the daintiest little plum pudding with wine sauce, and you should see my angel cake and my turkey croquettes And yet you think I am afraid to be come a poor man's wife because I can' cook for him. Ah! you foolish boy.'

And as Horace walked two miles homeward to save a nickel toward this future bill of fare and reflected on the fact that he had been refused an increase of $2 a week on his salary of $14, he thought that perhaps he was, after all, "a foolish boy."—Detroit Free Press.

SICILY'S BRIGANDS.

THOSE OF RECENT YEARS MERELY BANDED ASSASSINS.

Twenty Years Ago Brigandage Had a Flavor of Romance-Later the Bands Were Composed Chiefly of Murderers and Other Criminals-Matters of Record.

It has been the fashion of late years among Sicilians to speak of brigandage as a thing of the past, says Scipio Sighele in the Archives d'Anthropologie Criminelle, but as a matter of fact one band of Sicilian brigands has flourished in the district of but as a matter of fact one band of Sicilian brigands has flourished in the district of San Mauro for the past six or seven years and is not yet quite destroyed. This band, perhaps the last of the long line of Sicilian brigands, is simply an association of assassins without any of the romance attached to some of the profession.

Sicilian brigandage of 20 years ago had about it the flavor of romance. For example, Baron Sigardi, riding out one day in 1874 with some friends, was suddenly surrounded by a larger body of horsemen under the brigand Capraro. The baron and his party were courteously told that they were prisoners, and the whole cavalcade proceeded some distance until the baron was singled out and politely requested to permit himself to be blindfolded. Some hours later he found himself in an elegantly appointed house, where he dined sumptuously at a table furnished with beautiful linen and handsome silver, all the luxuries of the season, and even tee, being served. After the payment of a ransom of $50,000 the baron was again put in possession of his watch and bank notes and escorted almest to the railway station. At parting with him his escort begged the honor of heing permitted to kiss his hand. San Mauro lies 69 miles from Palermo and 21 from Cefalu. The latter place is reached by a ride of six hours in a diligence over rough mountain roads. The people of San Mauro are mostly field la-reached by a ride of six hours in a dili-gence over rough mountain roads. The people of San Mauro are mostly field la-borers and almost 6,000 in number. A band of brigands infested the region from 1870 to 1876. They were 15 in number, under the leaders Rocca and Rinaldini. They were clad in a uniform of blue vel-yet, riding boots and a distinctive bet vet, riding boots and a distinctive hat. Each wore upon his finger a ring with the initial "R," in honor of the leaders. They were armed with double barreled carbines, revolvers and poniards. They had fine horses and many masks and other devices for disguises, including uniforms of the local gendarmes. It was their pleasant way, on meeting the servant of some rich proprietor, to say:

proprietor, to say:

"I saw your master yesterday on a horse that pleased me. Have it at —— tomorrow." And the horse was usually delivered according to demand.

Rocca died by his own hand rather than yield to the soldiers that had besieged him in a house for two hours. Rinaldini was killed in an encounter with the troops in August, 1876, and the band was dispersed.

August, 1879, and the band was dispersed.
Fourteen years later a new band of San Mauro brigands suddenly appeared in the haunts of the old band. The leaders were Melchlorre Candino and Placido Rinaldini. a relative of the other brigand chief. The newcomers with their chiefs numbered 11. newcomers with their chiefs numbered 11. They were almost the same uniform as their predecessors, though the blue velvet was sometimes replaced with reddish brown, yellow or black. They had the spurred riding boots and good horses, but not the multitude of devices for disguise, as a handkerchief covering part of the face served their purpose. Candino is a peasant of San Mauro. He took the field in May, 1889, after having done four murders. Within a year Rinaldini and nine other brigands, all from the region of San Mauro, had joined him. Within the next two years the band assassinated more than 20 persons.

This new band of San Mauro flourished by reason of deep scated principles of the Sicilian nature. Many of their murders were done for the private revenge of individual brigands. Others were by way of punishment for what the brigands esteem treachery, the revelation of the movements of the band to the soldiery or the bearing of truthful witness in court against cap-tured brigands or their friends. Revenge is a prime principle of the Sicilian, and silence in court is another. An injured Sicilian does not testify

An injured Sicilian does not testify against his enemy in court, because he is too proud to have the government attend to a matter that should be one for private revenge. "The truth to the confossor and to no one else," is a Sicilian proverb. Louis Mazzola, one of the San Mauro band, killed in 1884 one Cassataro, the husband of his mistress, and through the courageous testimony of the murdered man's relatives was found guilty and sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment. He escaped in 1890, and, regardless of the danger of detection, went straight to his old home to revenge himself upon the brother of his former victim. He found that the safest thing to do was to enter the band of brigands, and the band made Mazzola's vengeance its own. Cassataro, being in his garden with his wife and children, was ap proached by three men who represented themselves as from the local military com mander and commissioned to fetch him away. They hurried him off, but the wife suspicious, sent to the military commander and learned that her husband was not in the hands of the authorities. Searchers hurried into the mountains and found the dead body of Cassataro with three bullet wounds in the heart. This occurred in

The chief newspaper of Palermo, in commenting on this crime, called for the suppression of the brigands. About three weeks later the editor received from Candino a note for publication saying that, while it was true that Mazzola had taken his reverse that Mazzola had his rovenge, the band was not made up of indiscriminate assassins. Disgusted with the unjust abuse to which they were subjected, the brigands had withdrawn from San Mauro to the heart of the mountains. The letter closed with salutations to the The letter closed with santations to the editor and assurances of esteem. Accompanying it was a five franc note to pay for its insertion in the newspaper. The earlier band of San Mauro had also issued a processor lamation, posting it on the church door in 1876, but Candino, more modern in his methods, had reached his public through a

Birthday Heroism.

It is recorded of a little Sydney boy that he allowed his mother's birthday to dawn without having anything to give her. This was, to him, a terrible state of things and seemed to call for a desperate remedy.

He began by offering her, one after another, every toy he owned, but she was too good natured to take them. At last, after carefully considering the whole mat-ter, he said with a degree of earnestness which showed how much he felt the sacrifice he was about to propose:
"I know what I'll do. I'll take a dose of castor oil for you!" The resources of hero-ism, so far as he was concerned, were ex-hausted.—Strand Magazine.

SILVER IN THE WEST.

A Boston Newspaper Man Gets a Few Tips on the Greatest of Political Movements.

Henry Haynie, a correspondent sent out by the Boston Herald, is learning the truth about the silver cause, and, what is really astonishing, is printing it in a series of letters in that big daily of the Hub. In a recent letter from Denver he says, among many other inter-esting things which fill over three columns, the following:

There are several small parties and associations among the political people of this western country which are dis-tinct from and outside of the two old parties. It is these several associations that count for most in the coming campaign—that is, if they become united—but as yet it is by no means certain that these several groups will ever be able to unite in the silver issue. It is claimed, however, that if every party and per-son favoring the rehabilitation of silver as money were to sink all minor issue and ambitions—were to put away the idea of fealty to old parties and unite with the one object in view, that of bimetallism—their cause or candidate would win next November. I have yet to meet a man or woman, except up in Wyoming, who is not irrevocably committed to the silver issue-that is, if their own words go for anything.

However, a third party will not be summoned into life until after both of the old parties have had an opportunity to refuse a plank asking for the free coinage of silver on the ratio already mentioned, and the Populist convention was called purposely several weeks later than the regular conventions so as to afford the Republican and Democratic parties this opportunity. One thing is certain, the politics of this third party are in the hands of trained politicians, and they are not going to hurry or make many mistakes, if any. Men like Senators Teller, Stewart, Jones, Morgan, Allen, Butler, Cameron, Warner, Pence, Mott, Peffer and Tillman have no ambition to gratify, but a principle to es-tablish. There is no question but that the west and south want free silver, but it is a question whether for the sake of it they will throw aside all differences and march under one banner.

"What we need," a tolerably well to do farmer in Kansas said to me, "what we require, are higher prices, but so long as a single standard, and that one gold, is maintained, higher prices are impossible. Without higher prices the American people cannot pay their foreign debts, and unless we pay those debts we cannot maintain the gold standard, for the dragnet of the foreign creditor will take it all. In short, sir, a continued gold standard means our ruin, just as it also means the ruin of your manufacturing people in New England, and a monetary system which is rapidly drawing the producing classes of the richest nation on earth into the vortex of financial destruction is neither sound nor honest, and no amount of banking declamation or party platform can make it so. The complete restoration of silver to its former place as a money metal will check the rising value of gold, deprive silver standard countries of the advantages in exchange which they now pos-sess and give the toiler and producer something like a fair return, and this can be done only in one way-the mints must be opened to free coinage again.

What Silver Is Doing.

While the financial situation in this country is growing steadily worse, the reports that come from the countries that use silver as standard money show that they are steadily growing in pros-

President Raoul, who has charge of large railway interests in Mexico, returns from that country and informs our merchants and business men that all interests in Mexico are prosperous; that industrial development is proceeding at a rapid rate and that foreign capital is flowing in at a satisfactory rate.

Mr. James D. Collins of Atlanta, who went to Costa Rica believing in the efficiency of the gold standard, returns a convert to the free coinage of silver. He found business of all kinds on a boom in that South American republic, and hav-ing the keen instincts of a successful business man had no difficulty in perceiving that the trouble with his own country was the constantly increasing value of gold and the constantly in creasing purchasing power of the gold dollar.

In everything that pertains to civilization and social advancement the United States has a tremendous advantage over Mexico and the South American re publics, but in the matter of money these republics have such a tremendous advantage over the United States that while business here is practically smoth ered and suppressed by the gold standard it is booming in the countries that employ silver as their money of final redemption. -Atlanta Constitution.

No Ambiguity This Time.

Don't be fooled any longer by the de ceitful word bimetallism. The time has come when things should be called by their right names. Bimetallism has a thousand strings to it. What we want is free silver, and there is only one way on earth to express it. "We demand the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting the consent of any nation on earth." There is nothing ambiguous about that. It means just what it says, and says just what it means. Even the lawyers could not twist it to mean anything elsa.—Topeka Co-opera-

The Victory In Alabama.

The defeat of the "sound money" candidate, Clarke, in Alabama is more complete than was at first announced.

It is the same old story told wherever the people get a chance to express their views on the financial question and the politicians are unable to conceal or side track it or prevent a popular vote. It is doubtful now if their tricks will benefit them much longer, for the people will no longer be hoodwinked in this matter, and will insist upon having this ques-tion brought before them and voting on it. - New Orleans Times-Democrat.
